

The John Carroll Review

Volume 71 | Issue 3

Article 22

June 2018

Edinburgh Buddha

Chris O'Hara

John Carroll University, cohara19@jcu.edu

Follow this and additional works at: <https://collected.jcu.edu/jcr>

Part of the Fiction Commons, Nonfiction Commons, and the Poetry Commons

Recommended Citation

O'Hara, Chris (2018) "Edinburgh Buddha," The John Carroll Review: Vol. 71 : Iss. 3 , Article 22.

Available at: <https://collected.jcu.edu/jcr/vol71/iss3/22>

This Poem is brought to you for free and open access by the Student at Carroll Collected. It has been accepted for inclusion in The John Carroll Review by an authorized editor of Carroll Collected. For more information, please contact connell@jcu.edu.

Edinburgh Buddha

By: Christopher O'Hara

As I walk down a cobblestone street
In a cold, clear, Edinburgh night,
The church bell rings deep twelve times
In the darkness.

I turn to my right and see a man in an alley,
Next to a neon club, "Vice,"
Hurling his last pint
Onto the pavement.

Further on, a white bearded man with a wrinkled face pulls a wool
Blanket over his cardboard bed
On the stony sidewalk.

On my left is a cemetery with a massive
Black wrought iron gate gilded fading gold.
In the dimly lit glow, I see a freshly dug grave
Covered in red roses and evergreen wreaths.

At the end of the street stands an Indian man
Wearing bright orange robes,
Asking for money for the temple.
In return, a plastic golden token
With the word "peace" on it
And a small, beaded bracelet.
Two pounds slip from my hands
into his, before falling loudly
into his small purse.
"Two more, not enough."